Course Title: English/Linguistics 310: History of the English Language*Enrollment: 35 Students

Course Description: A course which provides a historical study of the English language, beginning with a discussion of its Indo-European origins and continuing on to the present day. Students gain knowledge concerning phonological, grammatical, and lexical changes within the language over time, and examine the social and political conditions related to such changes. The course focuses on the English language in its social context and asks students to think about language as a dynamic system that changes when it comes into contact with other cultures through migration, war, colonialization, and technological advancements. Students explore such changes through various literary works in Old, Middle, and Modern English, including passages from Beowulf, Malory, Chaucer, and Shakespeare. Class activities involve lecture, discussion, and group work.
